

Abstract of th Invention

[0061] Performance of receivers can be determined by automated or manual testing of receivers without interrupting communication service to users of the communication system. In one embodiment, the system measures the performance of a deployed base station receiver without interrupting cellular service to subscribers registered with the base station.